Action Guide

Alison Monahan

1. Think About Where You Want to Be

Alison talks about how it is important to gear yourself up for the area of law that you want to be in. Once you know where you want to be, you can start preparing yourself for getting there.

How Does It Apply?

Write down below your ideas of where you want to be in law. It might be more than one, and that's ok. Now go about finding out information about these areas. Try speaking to your law school and write down some ideas of people that you can talk to.

2. Get Blogging

Alison explains about how a great way to get your name out there is to start blogging about your particular area. People will start to associate your name with your particular area.

How Does It Apply?

Write down below some ideas that you might have that you can blog about. It really can be almost anything that loosely relates to your area. By doing this you are not only putting your name out there, but also showing people what you know and that you are up to date.

3. Think about Your Pain Points

Alison describes how she started the Girls Guide to Law School because it was what she felt that she needed when she was in law school. Often the most successful ventures happen as a response to your own pain points.

How Does It Apply?

Write down some of your own pain points that you have. What things are difficult and maybe need looking at? Now think about how you can help yourself and others with the same problem.
